

Harms introduces new "end-times" novel

A book signing is planned by Craig Harms of Dallas City at the 1850's Guest House, 1550 E. State Highway 9 and 96, west of Dallas City, from 1 to 3 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 24.

Harms is releasing and signing his new novel described as an "end-times thriller," Day Omega, published by Light House Publishing. Books are $15 and will be signed by the author. Sales of the book will benefit charities in memory of Jamey Scott Rea.

The story is set in Chicago. As Sam Dimas leaves his house after an argument with his wife, there is a flash that seems to rip the sky apart, and his wife has gone — along with millions of other people around the world. Following what is to become known as Disappearance Day, a new seat of power is set up to control global outbreaks of disorder.

As the one-world government takes the reins of power, people are implanted with a microchip to help them with their daily living. Sam Dimas works for the company making the chips, making good money while many are reduced to extreme poverty.

This exciting and thought provoking story with unexpected twists and turns, races toward the end of the world, with the seven-year countdown to Christ's return. To see more, go to ww.dayomega.com.
